October Guest Speaker

Cameron Gillie began his photography career as a staff photographer at several daily newspapers. As a photojournalist, he documented all aspects of life, everything from the extraordinary to the ordinary, learning to appreciate both equally. Photojournalism is like having a front row seat observing life as it unfolds. He explored life in Colorado while working for the Greeley Tribune, and then in Florida, while working for the Naples Daily News.

Today, Cameron is a freelance photographer living in Madison, Wisconsin. He has been an exhibitor in art festivals and galleries around the Midwest, with his art taking on many forms over the years. His love of the outdoors inspires him to photograph wildlife and nature, and his fascination with the simplicity of homemade cameras brought him to pinhole photography.

This diverse background in photojournalism and creative photography prepared him for his biggest project ever — hiking the Ice Age Trail and documenting the landscapes, communities, and people of Wisconsin.
